Many significant professional liability claims asserted by Design-Builders against their Consulting Engineer in Design-Build (“DB”) arise from services performed by the Consulting Engineer during the procurement, or pursuit, pre-award phase of a DB project. How Consulting Engineers effectively manage, limit and defend professional liability risk of the Consulting Engineer in that high frequency and severity context often depends upon the understandings, scope and terms of the Consulting Engineer’s engagement during that phase, i.e., a “Teaming” or “Phase I” Agreement. We’ll focus on why this Teaming Agreement is essential in DB.

Learning Objectives
• What are the types and experience as to risks and claims that confront a Consulting Engineer arising out of pre-award services?
• What terms should be included in a Teaming Agreement to manage and limit professional liability risk of the Consulting Engineer in the context of pre-award services?
• How should the terms or “survival” of a Teaming Agreement relate to a subsequent Design Services (or “Phase II”) Agreement upon award of a DB Contract.
